Officials discuss Southridge Cres. work

The Southridge Crescent road and sewer line rehabilitation will soon be underway, though the town may not be able to do all the work that residents had hoped, according to officials.

The section of the crescent that was originally tendered for road, water and sewer line rehabilitation does not include the section that was dug up following the water main break that occurred in February, said Karen Henry, manager of planning and infrastructure for the town.

"We're trying to see whether we can get reasonable prices and use the funding we have identified for that project," Henry said in regards to the extra work.

"It may be that we put it in as a priority for next year, though we're still looking at that to see," she added.

The additional work that she and residents would like to see done would substantially broaden the scope of work that was outlined when the original rehabilitation job was put out to tender earlier this year, she noted.

"It's a huge amount of work to add to an existing contract, so it's difficult to just say 'Here just do this, double the price of the work' because it's quite a big chunk of work to add to it," she said.

It is also questionable for a municipality to take a contract that has already been tendered and make such a large change to it, she said.

"The funding available also has restrictions. So they need to make sure the work is acceptable to grant approvers. Then also take it all to council to see if that's the priority for the town," she noted.

"We do have some lines in town that are much, much older. Southridge was not the best quality original construction. The developers struggled, and for whatever reason we've been paying for the poor quality ever since."

When asked if legal pursuit against the original developers is possible, she said that the project was completed so long ago that the town would likely pay more on lawyers than it would ever recover.

"There's so many reasons why their lawyers would say they don't have to pay. It would be very hard to prove exactly what dollar figure they owe us. It should last a lot longer than this, but it's very hard to pin people down," she said.

Mayor Brian Wittal said the way Southridge was built, there are likely going to be many more issues arising as time goes on and the original infrastructure ages.

"And when you're talking about a 30-year-old area, you wouldn't expect you'd be having to replace utilities after 30 years," said Wittal.

Though it may sound simple that if contractors will be working on one section of road for rehabilitation, the town could just expand the contract to cover what was dug up during the water main break, he noted it's harder than it sounds.

"It seems to make sense that if you're going to do it, do it all," he said. "The problem is the tender was already specifically put out for just doing that one area with the sewer line, and the tender has already been awarded."

The additional work, including the roadwork, is going to cost about as much as the original tender, he said. "You're talking a few hundred thousand dollars, so you can't just add that on to the original tender."

Chamber of commerce holds BBQ

KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The Didsbury and District Chamber of Commerce hosted a barbecue and meeting last Wednesday, June 12, filling the train station with members and town officials.

President Shelley Fakir said the total membership for the chamber is about the same as last year with just over 70 members, and the dinner had a good turnout.

One of the highlights, she said, was when town councillors brought some information to the meeting concerning Shantz Crossing, Heritage Crossing, and other interesting things officials are planning for the coming months.

Chamber members conferred with each other, sharing input and asking questions about where the chamber is headed, she said.

"Sometimes we don't get as many people out as we'd like, so we don't get as many of them talking and you don't hear a lot of what their concerns were," said Fakir.

"Though last night there weren't many concerns, it was more positive as to what's going on."

One of the other highlights was the business spotlight, which she said will become a common occurrence at each general meeting in the future.

"A lot of (people) don't realize the impact the chambers have across the province and even across the country."

SHELLEY FAKIR

President, Didsbury and District Chamber of Commerce

"We did the business spotlight on Tanas Concrete, because Tanas is keeping their headquarters here in Didsbury (at the Excalibur Building)."

She said the chamber is currently preparing for annual events such as the pancake breakfast, which will take place on Aug. 16, as well as the realize the impact the chambers have across the province and even across the country," she noted.

Though many don't think that chambers are political groups, she said that they actually are, in a way.

At an Alberta Chamber of Commerce (ACC) Annual General Meeting earlier this year, which Fakir attended, Alberta Transportation presented the fact that it will be in contact with chambers across the province to determine infrastructure development and revitalization, she said.

"Right now I think (ACC) has quite a few policies they're lobbying this government with, and they have a big impact. If the business core has a concern with respect to things that are happening within the government, if they're part of the policy committee, they can have a voice in letting the government know how they feel about upcoming things," said Fakir.

"A lot of them don't

being just a chamber member and business owner in Didsbury, I didn't realize there was that political connotation until I actually started attending these events and meetings."

The bigger communities and cities have many policies they lobby governments with, based on what their members bring to them, she added.

"So we will have that input, but we will also be informed about what the plan is for roads and infrastructure in our area, instead of waiting until we hear about it in the newspaper or through the town."

She sees this as a big step for chambers across the province, especially because the partnership came out of a small chamber simply wanting to know about road projects, she said.

"Business owners need to know that this is what the chamber can do for you. It gets your voice heard, not just locally but provincially and nationally."

Traffic calming options for Southridge Cres.

KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

Following a delegation of Southridge Crescent residents who came to the May 28 town council meeting, Karen Henry, manager of planning and infrastructure, is looking into various options to address their concerns regarding drivers speeding through the crescent. Teresa Lounsbury, who led the delegation, brought up concerns that despite poor visibility, tight driving lanes, and children at play, many drivers speed through the crescent, which prompted her to collect signatures on a petition to designate a playground zone in the crescent.

Henry said though a playground zone designation could remedy the problem, there are a number of other solutions that could also help resolve the issue.

She is currently in discussions with ISL

Engineering in regards to forming a Transportation Master Plan for the town, so she brought up the issue at a recent meeting with them, she said.

Because she just started discussions with ISL regarding the issue, she couldn't comment on what the other options are, though she said ISL does have a variety of traffic calming options that will be given consideration.

"They will look at all those options," said Henry. "There must be some way to slow the traffic down other than having a cop car sitting there 24/7."

He noted there are rules as to how tenders can be put out by municipalities, and the town needs to follow them.

"And you can't just put a tender together in two days and then throw it out," he said.

"You've got engineering and all kinds of other things that have to be done. So we're looking at how it is we can try to manage this whole situation."

He said the town is exploring options now to see what they can do, but until they know whether the water main patches are holding, they can't really determine what the go-forward strategy should be.

"I'd love to be able to start at one end of Southridge and just go all the way around and finish it if the whole area needs it, but we can't spend that much money on 30-year-old infrastructure. We've got 80-year-old infrastructure that needs replacement as well, so we have to prioritize."

Though officials are uncertain as to what course of action will be taken, he said the problem is on the table and officials are going to be looking into it in earnest to see what can be done to remedy the situation.

He noted timing on tendering is also a key factor, because when tenders go out early in the year, contractors will tend to bid lower on them, whereas later in the season, they already have work lined up and will bid higher because they can afford to lose the possible contract.

Annette Jensen, seen here, was busy in the museum basement serving up the delectable desserts. The event raised a total of $340 for the museum, according to Frankie Kelly, one of the organizers.

Editorial Criminals should pay the price

Criminal activities cost Alberta communities and their law-abiding citizens millions of dollars every year. Whether it's theft during break and enters, frauds through bogus cheque writing, drug trafficking, or outright robberies, the heavy cost of crime is, sadly, a part of everyday life.

Yet thanks to a provincial program started five years ago, criminals are now paying their communities back in ever-greater amounts.

The Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act allows the government to ask the court for civil orders forfeiting property acquired illegally and property used to carry out illegal acts.

DAN

Property can include all types of assets, including real estate, vehicles and cash, while illegal acts can include Criminal Code and Controlled Drugs and Substance Act offences.

"This legislation is effective in allowing police agencies across Alberta to target dangerous property for removal from our communities, such as vehicles used to commit crime or homes used to grow marijuana," said Justice Minister Jonathan Denis.

"There is no easy answers when it comes to crime and safety, but Alberta is committed to putting meaningful changes in place."

The province recently released an update on the program – and the results show just how lucrative crime can sometimes be.

Over the past five years, more than $25 million in cash and property has been taken from criminals under the program, property that includes more than 250 vehicles, as well as 20 residential homes used for marijuana grow operations.

Money received from the sale of the property has, in turn, been used to fund many victim support programs, including prevention projects for youths at risk of criminal activities and gang involvement, and the funding of women's shelters across rural Alberta.

"The proceeds of crime are doing some good by directly compensating Albertans most affected by crime and providing the funding for crime prevention projects in Alberta," said Minister Denis.

With Alberta's government facing many funding shortfalls these days, it's nice to see criminals helping to cover some of the costs by giving up their ill-gotten property and cash.

After five years in operation it is obvious the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act is doing what it is meant to do.

With the success of the program in mind, perhaps it's time for the provincial government to go one step further and start selling off the seized vehicles of convicted drunk drivers.

With thousands of impaired cases still plaguing Alberta communities – costing taxpayers untold millions of dollars, not to mention the many, many lives lost and ruined – why not start making drunk drivers join their fellow criminals in paying a much higher price?

Commentary AHS execs get the boot

ROBERT GERST

Last Wednesday, Alberta Health and Wellness Minister Fred Horne fired the board of Alberta Health Services (AHS), including the newly-appointed chair, and presumed saviour of the system, Stephen Lockwood.

The straw that broke the camel's back this time was pay-at-risk compensation payments to executives. Pay-at-risk is the new politically-correct term for performance bonuses.

The board wanted to pay the bonuses because AHS managers had met their performance targets.

The minister, however, wanted the board to reconsider the bonuses because he considered them out of step with the economic times, the large provincial deficit, and most importantly, the expectations of Albertans.

Lockwood argues that making decisions on the basis of Albertans' expectations amounts to political interference. Politics, he says, will doom Alberta to an unsustainable and poor performing system. The decision was undoubtedly politically motivated but Stephen Lockwood is still wrong.

He is wrong because, besides being voters, Albertans are also customers of AHS. And the customer isn't happy.

And they can't complain to AHS because nobody's listening and few at the top could care less.

Besides, AHS and the number crunchers at the Health Quality Council of Alberta (HQCA) are far too busy pumping out phony customer satisfaction surveys to convince the public that everything is spiffy, thank you very much. The minister may be playing politics, but at least he's hearing the voice of the customer.

Reducing wait times has been the priority for the ministry for close to a decade, and for AHS since its inception. But there has been no progress on reducing wait times. None. No business - and no board - deserves to survive having demonstrated such a complete inability to satisfy customer requirements.

This raises an important question. How is it that senior executives at AHS could qualify for bonuses in meeting their performance targets, even as AHS itself fails to meet any of its own?

To understand this is to understand the con game of pay-at-risk.

Executives know they get a bonus for meeting some measurable performance target. So they set a performance target they know they can make. And who approves this executive entitlement scheme? The board.

For example, Lockwood made much of the fact that AHS under spent its budget by $100 million last year. This has been offered as one reason why executives have earned their performance bonuses. But what are we rewarding here?

If I know I receive a bonus for under spending my budget, the rational course of action is to put more money in my budget than I will need. And delaying or otherwise sabotaging important projects which negatively impact my budget, such as opening a new hospital or improving access, will also yield personal performance rewards. Pay at risk or pay for performance only produces endless organizational game playing conducted at the expense of customers.

This destructive game playing at AHS was highlighted in The Decline of Health Services in Alberta published over two years ago. The international peer-reviewed journal, Leadership in Health Services, announced that its upcoming issue will feature publication of a version of this paper, using AHS as a case study and model for the world as to how not to run a health-care system. Hopefully, others can learn from our mistakes.

Mayor's talk: June

Help avoid flooding

BRIAN WITTAL

As summer approaches and brings with it the recent deluge of rains that we have received, there come a number of potential issues and concerns that I would like to review with residents.

First and foremost is the potential for flooding of properties due to the above-average rainfall we have received.

In high rainfall events, it is critical that you shed the water away from the foundation of your home to avoid flooding.

Properly functioning eavestroughs are critical to do this effectively.

Rain barrels catching water are only sufficient until they fill up, then the water overflows and sits along your basement wall, which is very risky.

Make sure that your water barrels have an overflow hose that drains the excess water well away from your house foundation.

Residents need to be aware that any stormwater cannot be directed onto adjacent properties. It must drain from your property onto a laneway or street.

My second suggestion would be to make sure that if you have a sump pump, ensure that it is working properly and that it is pumping the water outside and away from your house.

You are not allowed to pump your sump pump water directly into your sewer - it must go outside your home so that it can drain into the stormwater system.

If everyone were to pump sump waters into the sewer, then the system would end up over-stressed - especially in a high rainfall event - and that could cause sewer backups throughout the system - something that no one wants.

That is why it is critical that all residents make sure their sump pumps are pumping the waters outside of their residence.

Unfortunately, due to the age of some of the sewer infrastructure in most towns, when we have high rainfall events there is a lot of rainwater that infiltrates the sewage pipelines. These waters either enter the pipes through cracks in the lines or through the manholes at ground level, when they are inundated with excess water flows that the stormwater system can't clear away fast enough.

This leads to another point, which is checking to see if the sewer line in your house has a properly functioning backflow preventer valve. If one is not present, you may want to check into what it will cost to have one installed to prevent any future potential sewer backups into your basement.

Residents may want to contact their insurance agent to confirm what, if any, kind of flooding insurance you have on your home. Some policies cover you for sewer backup and others don't, and a lot of policies don't cover you if it is water leaking in from outside the home, so make sure you have the appropriate coverage.

Another question I get that stems from the recent high rainfall is about the quality of the drinking water we get from the treatment plant in Innisfail.

High rainfall increases the river flow dramatically, which churns up sand, silt and gravel that cause problems for the plant.

These plants are designed and managed to handle these events to ensure that the quality of the water that we receive is not compromised in any way.

At times there may be a stronger chlorine odour than normal and that is due to additional treatment to ensure the quality of the water.

This usually happens in the spring and early summer, during high-water events.

I hope this is helpful information for some of you.

Brian Wittal is the mayor of Didsbury.

Lions' Soapbox Derby 2013

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The Didsbury Lions held their 13th annual Soapbox Derby last Saturday morning on Highway 582, near the intersection of 14 Street.

Though the wind was blowing, there was nothing but sun for the 26 cars and their drivers, according to Neil Youngs, who organized the race heats at the derby.

"It went pretty good, and we got done before it rained and everything like that, so that was kind of nice," said Youngs.

He explained the racers were organized into three divisions - Junior, Senior, and Open. The Juniors were the younger racers, the Seniors older, and the Open section was where cars that weren't put together using a stock kit could race.

The B, C and D events were comparable to consolation events, where racers who hadn't won a race in the previous heats could race, he added.

The results, according to Youngs, are as follows:

Junior

Kyle Krause won the A event and was declared the overall winner in the category.

Alyssa Patterson took the win for the B event.

Josh Wright was the C event winner.

Hunter Macdonald took the D event.

Senior

Kadi Chant won the A event and was declared the overall winner in the Senior division.

Stuart Burrell was declared the B event winner.

Ben Grue won in the D event.

Open

Callum Deditch took first place and overall winner in the A event.

Camryn Hutchison took first in the B event.

Mason Deditch won the C event.

Brendan Macrae took first in the D event.

Youngs noted that some of the riders came out from as far as Lacombe, where one group was sponsored by the Lacombe 4-H.

"It was a much better turnout this year," he added.

"I think we only had 14 cars last year if I remember correctly - we were up almost double what we had last year.

"Everybody was quite pleased with it, they thought that we ran it well and everybody was pleased with it. I had a couple comments saying it was run better than last year, so I guess we're learning as we go along, as this is the 13th year that we've run it."

He added most of the organizers have been the same every year, and that they learn more every year.

For the derby, racers and their cars were lined up on a ramp that the Lions tow out for the event, the cars were released, and once they had stopped at the bottom of the hill - near the Zion Evangelical Missionary Church - the cars were placed into a horse trailer which would then drive the cars back up to the starting line.

"That's one of the keys to the thing is getting the cars back so we can run the next run. The winners have to come back up and run another race, so that's one of the key factors in keeping things running smoothly," said Youngs.

"I thought it was a very good day. We missed the rain, and it was a bit windy, but everybody was happy with the results and everything seemed to fall into place quite nicely.

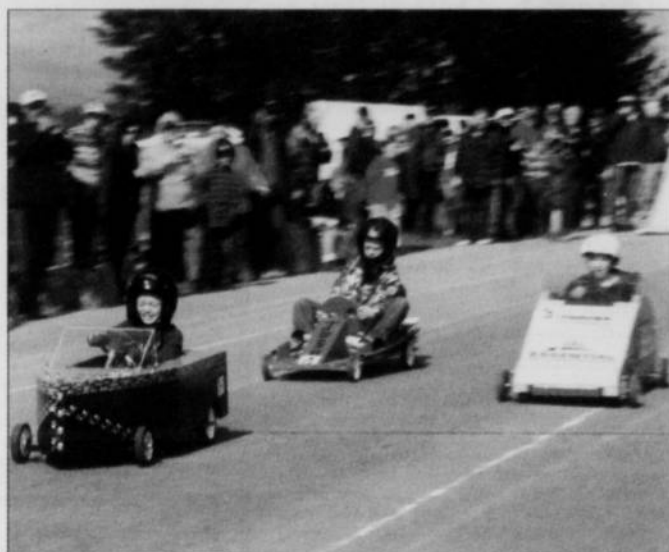

He noted the kids had a lot of fun taking their cars out.

"The kids really enjoy it and that's why we do it. We don't make any money at it, it's just meant to involve the community and give something back."

Foiled fraud

Police received a complaint of attempted fraud last week between June 5 and June 10, according to Cpl. Warren Wright.

A Didsbury resident received several cold calls recently, advising her that she had won a million dollars, and in order to claim her prize, she was asked to transfer funds to a specified person through Western Union, at which point the million dollars would be released, he said.

"She saw the red flags and did the right thing by contacting the RCMP, who indeed confirmed that it was a fraud, preventing her from losing her money," said Wright.

"There are many different variations of the fraud, and it can be received through email, text, phone, fax - just about any form of communication."

He encouraged residents to always call police before releasing money to a third party, especially when something sounds too good to be true.

or persons broke into the Freemason's Lodge in Didsbury, said Wright, noting this is the second occurrence in six weeks.

Nothing appeared to be missing this time, however, as the first time the break-in occurred, thieves stole the money box, which members now remove from the building after each meeting, he added.

During the same time frame, Wright reported that somebody broke into the Didsbury Café, taking an undisclosed amount of cash. Both facilities had been locked and the burglars forced entry.

Police believe the break-ins are related due to the close proximity and similar time frames. Both robberies were discovered the following Monday.

Wright encouraged anybody who may have seen suspicious behaviour between Thursday night, June 6 and Monday, June 10, to contact RCMP or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-TIPS.

Golf club vandalized

The Didsbury Golf Club was vandalized the weekend of June 7-9, said Wright.

Though nothing was missing, a telephone and TV wire were cut on the exterior of the building, he noted.

Garage theft

Four Chevrolet 20-inch chrome-magnesium rims were stolen from a garage on 15 Street and 20 Avenue in the morning of Wednesday, June 12, said Wright.

A suspicious white Dodge Ram was observed leaving the scene at a high rate of speed, and a second vehicle - a silver GMC Sierra with a push bar in the front - is also believed to be involved, he added.

The value of the rims is estimated at $1,000, he noted.

RCMP look into Carstairs truck, grocery theft

JARED SIEMENS

A white male stole an undisclosed amount of groceries from Westview Co-op in Carstairs on Monday, June 10 around 1:15 p.m., police report.

The man, who is described as mid to late 30s, unkempt, skinny, and approximately 5 feet 9 inches, had been observed loitering around the store before fleeing with his stolen loot in a stolen white Ford F-250.

The vehicle, which had been stolen from Olds earlier that morning, has the licence plate BCT7645.

"Police did an extensive search of the town and rural MVC for the vehicle and didn't find it," said Cpl. Wright.

Cpl. Wright said he feels that the suspect is not from the Carstairs area, but may be currently living there as either a renter or squatter.

"I believe perhaps it is the same male that has been lurking around Carstairs yesterday looking for unlocked vehicles," he said, though he noted police have yet to confirm this connection.

The RCMP is asking the public to report anyone who seems to be acting or appearing suspicious.

The RCMP is also examining surveillance footage collected from the business community in an effort to determine if this suspect is one and the same as a male suspect who was being tracked through the Carstairs community on Wednesday, June 12, in connection with a series of vehicle thefts and attempted vehicle thefts, said Wright.

No definitive conclusions have been reached yet.

A cellphone was discovered in a vehicle that the latter suspect had been trying to steal Wednesday, June 12, and recovered by RCMP.

Photo submitted

The white male (above) who allegedly stole an undisclosed amount of groceries from Westview Co-op in Carstairs on Monday, June 10 was captured entering the store by security cameras. The man is described as mid-to-late 30s, unkempt, skinny, and approximately 5 feet 9 inches.
